A parent's guide to the common cold. Krysta Koepke, MD. Posted November 20, 2018. You are probably not imagining it if it seems like your little one has a runny nose all winter long. That's because colds, or upper respiratory infections, are the most common illnesses children get. On average, a child gets six to eight colds a year, and younger children and those who attend child care may catch a cold more often.
